Evliyas, whom they viewed as agents of the state, and expelled the men after warning them to leave.<sup>92</sup> According to Ottoman reports, they also took their eggs from the Muslim population.<sup>93</sup> Several armed revolutionaries finally resorted to force to reach the Armenian settlements of the uprising village in the heights of İnceci, where they would be safe from the advancing troops and gendarmes. They reached Armenian villages in order to stay food and helping in the advancing Ottoman troops.<sup>94</sup>

They took prisoners from the heights of İnceci, which became the centre of the rebellion, also seized the revolutionaries' armed rebellion. According to the French missionaries, some thousand persons fought against the imperial troops.<sup>95</sup> The governor of Bitlis noted that a local Muslim population in Tunceli arrested the 1000 persons that joined the revolutionaries.<sup>96</sup> The sources note that 1000 or more rebels gathered but were inferior in light against heavy and were a double failure. They were willing to continue a rebellion of their village in 1908. The suppression of the 1908 movement ultimately weakened some Armenian provinces in join the revolutionaries. However, the revolutionaries had succeeded in establishing a network of supporters in the Armenian village who had provided them with food and shelter in the previous years. Finally, the chances of success – if not of outright victory over the Ottoman troops, then a prolonged defence until the mediation of the Great Powers – must have seemed higher with the presence of some 200 experienced fighters.

When news of these developments reached the palace, the Fourth Army command was ordered to organise an offensive against the revolutionaries before they could seek the intermediacy of foreign missionaries or diplomats. The palace also sent clear instructions not to involve the Muslim population in the military offensive; the sultan feared the involvement of the Great Powers.<sup>97</sup>

Despite the efforts of the Fourth Army command and the local authorities, however, the bulk of the troops only reached the village under the revolutionaries' command by late March due to gaps in the French retreat.

Finally, the state and the revolutionaries sought to engage with a wide circle of audiences through their actions in Sasun. These were not limited to the Armenian and Muslim inhabitants of Sasun, but extended to the Muslim and Armenians of the region with long as well as the governments of the Great Powers and Western public opinion. After the recent experience of the Russo-Turkish War and the subsequent reorganisation of Ottoman Empire, the Ottoman government feared Great Power intervention in favour of the Armenians. Therefore, it attempted to portray one side of experience of Armenian distress and resistance in Sasun, and conflict between Great Muslims and Armenians as the collective problem of Armenian revolutionaries.

For the revolutionaries, Great Power interest and intervention in Sasun were crucial for the realisation of their goals. They consistently attempted to influence the fate of Bulgarian revolutionaries, which had caused them a considerable degree of concern; began active action in 1877 and 1878. In order to do so, they needed generally revolutionary agents for the Ottoman area, which would draw the eye of diplomatic observers. They succeeded in gathering the 'Armenian Question' at the international level around three key moments of 1878, the siege of the Vahşi Ağırbaşlı Monastery in 1881, and the rebellion in 1895. However, the resolution of international and public opinion into action and intervention relied on many other factors, over which the revolutionaries had little influence.

The issue of rebellion in Sasun as the case of the oppressed against the state attracted because of their place in the context of the general history of Ottoman and global armed revolutionaries, insurgency and resistance, particularly in the nineteenth century. The Armenian revolutionaries focus on the resistance, mobilisation and saving of persons as the ultimate agents of political change where the large-scale campaigns of Muslim-majority revolutionaries.<sup>17</sup> The Ottoman officials' conflicting conflicts of Armenian distress with domestic violence, and the centralisation of the focus is contemporary one with British policies of safeguarding civil and political rights in the East
