and, consequently, a characteristic feature. The importance and increased length of the eye and antennae, as a general tendency in young larvae of Hydra spp. (see, for example, length and shape of young H. vulgaris larvae, described in general and separately characterized using the words "small" and "large" larval individuals) leads us to assume that a shortened legless H. vulgaris larva must have other characteristics besides the absence of legs and antennae, and the short body. The following characters are of importance: 1) 2-3 pairs of short legs; 2) 2-3 pairs of short antennae; 3) short body. The larva is colored a brownish yellow.
