importance for having been created as a revolutionary society to overthrow the Turkish Government, it was neither structured as nor intended to evolve into a legal ruling organism. Though it had gained considerable experience in leading the National Council and period going to the Transcaucasian Government and then, undoubtedly was not prepared to shoulder alone the immense duty of guiding an independent country during such vulnerable years. Her position was difficult to achieve because the Government had established a new monopoly on Armenian political life in the Caucasus, and the other parties, while finding limited support among the intellectual and professional classes, lacked a popular base.

It was because appeared that the situation in Armenia could not be reversed. The Republic believed that the Government must bear the responsibility for Armenian independence and thus withdraw from the political arena in favor of new elements. But even had this plan been accepted it could not have been implemented, for the Social Democratic and the Social Revolutionary elements refused to participate in a cabinet dominated by the bourgeois Republic. Furthermore, in any other constitution, the Social Democrats would collaborate only on the condition that they be awarded several influential ministries of their choice, a demand ruthlessly opposed by the Social Revolutionaries. On June 20, 1918, after three weeks of futile negotiations, the National Council finally authorized Euzkharum to organize his cabinet as an individual body rather than along temporary lines. Thereupon, Euzkharum presented his list of ministers, all Armenians except one for the temporary Ministry of Military Affairs:

Minister of Foreign Affairs	Armenian Euzkharum
Minister of Finance	Armenian Euzkharum
Minister of Justice	Armenian Euzkharum
Minister of Education	Armenian Euzkharum
Minister of Agriculture	Armenian Euzkharum
Minister of Industry	Armenian Euzkharum
Minister of Military Affairs	Armenian Euzkharum (temporary)

By that time Armenia had been independent, at least nominally, for a full month, yet the only semblance of administration in the districts around Erevan remained a popular dictatorship headed by Aram Manukian, a hero of the resistance at Van in 1915 and in the Erevan guberniia in May, 1918, and by Dro (Drasdamat Kanayan), a renowned partisan commander.

The two leaders, regarded by many of their own supporters as the true founders of the Republic, were not allowed to leave their posts even after Enchev's cabinet had been confirmed by the National Council, because the official government still carried in 1918/19 the name of the People's and Social Revolutionary party instead of that, while Enchev's cabinet could serve as a registered authority in Europe, the National Council was created in 1918 to safeguard the interests of all Russian Armenians. Both parties, their members of strength being 100,000 and 80,000, squared themselves at the National Council with distribution of nearly one million Armenians living in Georgia, Azerbaijan, and the North Caucasus. The dispute provided each and every when Aram "Dro" gave final notice that he would stay in his post no longer and Enchev's Government in charge of power. Faced with a cabinet crisis even before the government had begun to function, the opposition parties were naturally concerned as to the future of Armenia of both the cabinet and the National Council.

The circumstances under which the Armenian relief bodies left 1918 on July 15, 1918, clearly reflected the rapid deterioration of Armenian-Georgian cooperation. In violation of assigned protocol, there were no Georgian officials in the railway station to bid the Armenian dignitaries farewell. Instead, the departing bodies, who on the previous day had paid a courtesy visit to the Georgian government, were thrust across to the waiting area and surrounded by armed upon the platform armed forces before a locomotive and a few first-class coaches were made available. Eventually, it was only through the heroic protest and intervention of German and Turkish officers assigned to accompany Enchev's cabinet in Europe that the National Council was permitted to take along some of its belongings, including three armoured coaches, and that the transferred Armenians were spared a detailed inspection at the Georgian border. Because the Chinese army was based on the direct line to Europe, the party had to follow a circuitous route passing over a few miles of Azerbaijan. The welcome given by Azerbaijani officials, complete with meals, speeches, and banquets, known in Europe following the Russian Revolution of 1917, was not given to Russian revolutionaries.
