Corporate executives were a much bigger presence at the 2002 conference than at the 1999 event. In attendance at the 2002 conference were representatives from 100 of the world's largest corporations, including 10 of the Fortune 500. The 1999 conference was attended by 100 of the world's largest corporations, including 10 of the Fortune 500.

These two approaches are complementary. The first approach is more general, and the second approach is more specific. The first approach is more general because it can be applied to a wide range of problems, while the second approach is more specific because it is only applicable to a narrow range of problems.
